Skiing

Went touring within Bridger Bowl's currently closed boundaries yesterday. The week of cold temperatures and lack of precip has done a number on the snow in terms of quality. Below the tops of PK and Alpine lift, all aspects have been wind affected. There is very little fresh snow available for transport anymore (at least below the ridge). I dug a little pit going up towards the fingers from PK. HS was 43cm. The base layer had a sugary, square-ish look to it, likely faceting rounds. The temperatures yesterday were mild and sunny and the winds were low.
